Palos Recluse Found Dead In Bed by Neighbor

Fred Werner, aged 40 years, who has been living alone in Palos Park for the past eight years, was found dead in bed Monday afternoon about two o'clock by Emil Witte. Mr. Werner was last seen Saturday night and complained of being ill.

The deceased has a nephew living in Wisconsin and relatives living in Germany. The inquest was held in Oak Lawn Tuesday morning.

Mr. Werner located in Palos about eight years ago. He did considerable hunting and trapping. In the summer he used to care for gardens and mow lawns.

Beagley Xmas Party Attended By Hundreds

The annual Christmas party given at the Beagley Electric Shop in Orland Park under the auspices of Mr. Clarence E. Beagley last Saturday afternoon and evening drew a crowd of about 500 people to this popular store. Radios, Frigidaires, plumbing fixtures and electrical goods of various kinds were on display and were demonstrated.

The party was enlivened with a number of real live entertainment features put on by real artists.

Continuous entertainment was furnished from noon to midnight by the Jack Danger Revue with Jack Danger as master of ceremonies. The revue consisted of two comedy clowns and a lady pianist. Singing, talking, tap dancing, music, comedy, etc., were the program features.

The youngsters were especially delighted with the funny and mirth provoking stunts of Harry Ferris, the ventriloquist. His "boy friend", his magic and his Punch and Judy show made a decided hit.

Another feature was a moving picture show "Man to Man" held in the basement of the store telling why an electrical refrigerator will make an ideal Christmas gift.

A cooking expert from the Frigidaire company delighted the ladies with her demonstration of the Frigidaire electric ice box, of new recipes. She also handed out samples of ice cream made in Frigidaire.

An electric clock was given as a door prize and was won by Mrs. Harger, the Frigidaire cooking expert. The party was a big success in every way.

Beauty Parlor Opens in Orland

Orland Park is getting a new business establishment by way of a beauty parlor opened in the Purple Candle Restaurant Building on 143rd street, by Mrs. Lloyd Cowen. The new business place opened Wednesday.

The beauty shop is located in the part of the building formerly occupied by the Orland Electric Shop conducted by Roy Loebe who has moved his shop into the west part of the building.

In a writeup in last week's issue relative to an auto accident in Mokena it was said that Walter Homering figured in the accident. This was in error and should have read Gilbert Homering.

New Choral Society Formed At Orland Park

A goodly number of people from Orland and Palos Park gathered at the home of Mrs. Stuart Patterson last Monday evening for the purpose of forming a community chorus.

It was decided to call the new organization the Orlos Choral Society and it will be a chorus of both men's and women's voices.

The following officers were elected: Mrs. Stuart Patterson, president; Mrs. George Gee, vice-president; Prudence Neff Thomas, musical director; Lois Ludwig, secretary; Roy Loebe, treasurer; and Mrs. Paul Sanders, librarian.

All those desiring to sing with the chorus are invited to join and may communicate with Miss Lois Ludwig, secretary of Orland Park or attend the next meeting of the club which will be next Tuesday evening at the Orland Park school.

Will Co. Historical Society Exhibits Quaint Old prints

Historic old American prints, some of them 100 years old, were the magnets that drew a goodly crowd to the assembly room, Joliet library, Monday night where the Will County Historical society exhibited a collection of rare Currier and Ives prints, and others equally interesting.

Among the prints hanging on the walls was a large steel engraving 100 years old. The first type of this work brought to the United States. It was the favorite sentimental subject of a little girl and a big dog, much fancied at the time.

Lithographs Are Shown. Another ancient print, very rare, was a lithograph in colors showing Montreal in 1830, from a drawing made by R. A. Sproule.

Numerous other colored lithographs, of romantic or sentimental subjects, showed the development (continued back page)

Tinley Park Junior Garden Club Notes

Hang a wreath at your threshold on Christmas

In token of Love, Life and Beauty. For like the bound circle of evergreen foliage, They have neither end nor beginning.

And weave in bright berries and fruits, or a ribbon For Joy, Mirth, Bounty and friendly Good Cheer.

By Josephine Greco

The regular meeting of the Junior Garden Club was held Saturday afternoon at the school. Our new president, Fern Fulton called the meeting to order. The Garden Buds told how to make vases for some delightful Christmas Gifts.

Fern Fulton recited two very lovely pieces, Catherine Hirsch, Margaret Lorenz played piano solos. All Garden Buds sang Christmas songs. Mrs. Florence Anderson took charge of the study period. The subject was about leaves. Fern Fulton, Margaret and Velma Lorenz had a nice collection of pressed leaves. The Garden Buds gave Mrs. Goessel a hand as she is the new president of the Senior Garden Club. Cookies and cake were served by Fern Fulton, Marion Moss and Irma Hick. Shirley Anderson is a very fine program chairman.

Clarence Beagley To Sponsor Unique Auction Saturday

Another big event at the store of Clarence E. Beagley in Orland Park will take place Saturday evening, December 12th when a public sale will be held at which one Westinghouse electric radio and a toy electric train will be sold at auction.

The affair is an original novelty stunt of advertising. Bids on either the train or radio have been placed in a sealed box located in the store. On Saturday evening, December 12, commencing at 8 o'clock the box will be opened and the highest bidder on each article will receive same for the cash price bid. Merchandise is not to be taken from the store until paid for. If the party having the highest bid is at the store at the time of auction he will receive a surprise package valued at $3 FREE.

Willard Creer will be the auctioneer and Tom Cooper will serve as clerk.

A program will be held in connection with the auction and a feature of the program will be a moving picture of local scenes including the big Labor day celebration parade, catching of the greased pig, and many other local events and incidents. The entire program will be interesting and instructive. Be sure to attend this unique sale and get a real kick out of it. Tell your friends about it and better still bring them.

I Will Tell One Now

We have added another member to our staff this week in Yours Truly Ann Lots who will try and help you pass a few idle moments.

Ann invites letters of friendly criticism on her efforts to entertain you and will reply those of interest and the betterment of her work. It will mean fun and amusement for all.

Ex-Service Men Must Pay Special Licenses Is Ruling

The question has been raised in villages having a special village tax or license for handling tobacco, cigars, candy, soft drinks, etc., whether ex-service men are required to pay these licenses the same as other storekeepers or whether they are exempt from paying such special license fees.

In an opinion on this matter, Attorney General Oscar E. Carlstrom advises that the act which exempts ex-service men from paying such license applies only to ex-service men who have no fixed place of business, but who make a house to house canvass. In other words, to ex-service men who dispose of goods, wares, fruits or merchandise by peddling.

It is therefore the opinion of the attorney general that the ex-service man who has a fixed place of business is not exempt from paying the special village licenses above mentioned.

Negro Burglar Holds N. Lenox Posse at Bay

When Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Button and the formers' mother arrived at their home southwest of New Lenox Sunday afternoon about 4:45 o'clock they found it had been forcibly entered and that two wrist watches, a blue overcoat, a suit coat some shirts, a pair of Mr. Button's shoes, several pairs of socks, a .38 Colt revolver and some papers and a child's bank were missing.

Calling upon William Clark and his son Roy, the former being the brother-in-law of Mr. Button, and a neighbor, Fordham Moore, to help him, Mrs. Button took up their trail of the burglar.

Hunting along the Michigan Central tracks south of the Button home the searchers presently came upon a large negro. The man was over six feet tall and husky. He was wearing Mr. Button's overcoat and suit. In one hand he carried a pair of Mr. Button's shoes. In the other hand he carried Mr. Button's revolver which he waved at the approaching possemen and warned them to remain where they were.

The posse did so. Mr. Button suggested to the burglar that if he had no use for a railroad commutation ticket and some papers that were in the bill fold in the coat he would appreciate their return. The burglar very obligingly handed them over to Mr. Button, but when the latter suggested to the colored man that the shoes he was carrying in his hand were far too small for him, the man of color demurred and said he would keep them as he could either sell or trade them and saying he had no more time, he marched on down the railroad track.

Mr. Button later recalled that the revolver was not loaded while in his possession.

THE STORY

Six bandits board the steamer, Midnight Sun, tied to the bank of the Mackenzie, hold up Father Claverly and other passengers, kill Jimmy Montgomery, formerly of the Mounted, and get away with gold dust and furs. Corp. Bill Hardsock reports the crime to Sgt. Alan Baker at the Mounted Police post at Fort Endurance. Baker has a dispute with his incompetent superior, Inspector Haskell, over plans for the capture of the bandits. Baker starts out with five men. At the MacMillan trading post, Joyce MacMillan is alone, awaiting the return of her father. She is thrilled to see Baker. She had hoped to marry him, but had been stunned by news of his engagement to Elizabeth Spaulding. From his talk she learns that the marriage is not certain. Stolen furs are found in MacMillan's shed. Evidence incriminates Joyce's father.

Unwilling to detain him, Joyce offered him her hand, wishing him success today, hiding her fears for him when he should come up with these men. Alan bent nearer her, he bent down a little to kiss her, as more than once he had done in the years past. It was an impulsive act; he was swept by admiration of her bravery, of her girlish prettiness. And it was a humble act of contrition, too, and self-reproach; for he had said to himself that if he had kept up his visits here, instead of leaving Joyce all alone to the battle, he might have halted Dave MacMillan's plunge into crime.

She went with him down to the wharf and stood watching the patrol embark. At the first bend above, he turned to look back. Vaguely through the mist he saw Joyce still standing on the wharf in the gray chill of earliest morning. He waved to her and caught the tiny white of her kerchief answering.

When the mist had hidden her from him, he turned his eyes ahead. Somewhere on up the spruce-buried Alooska were those six bandit strangers, rifle-armed and desperate and certain to give battle. Against them he was pitting his life and the lives of his men today.

Fifty miles above the MacMillan trading store, Alan ordered Pedneault to swerve in toward the north bank and stop.

He believed those bandits could not be very far ahead now. Across this silent wilderness the roar of the launch's engine carried for five or six miles. Warned of pursuit, those criminals might lift their canoes back into the timber and let the police go harmlessly past. Likelier still, they might lay an ambush where the river was narrow, and open on the launch with repeating rifles at a murderous point-blank range. But if he located them on up-stream, he could slip upon them quietly in the paddle craft and lay a deadly ambush himself.

Taking a pair of binoculars he splashed ashore and hurried up a hill to its summit. There he had a clear view of a long river "straight" reaching twenty miles up-stream.

He moved his glasses slowly up-stream, praying for a glimpse of those two outlaw canoes. Carefully focusing, he scrutinized the river, the banks on either side with their little curves and hollows; and searched above the trees for a wisp of camp smoke. Nothing, nothing whatsoever, of two creeping black dots. The bandits were twenty miles ahead at least.

As he hurried back down to the launch, he began to realize that those two canoes had traveled more swiftly than he had thought possible. For the first time in his police experience Alan found himself ill at ease and uncertain of what he was running into. Though he could understand, on the assumption of Dave MacMillan's guilt, how the bandits knew just the right moves to make in this dimly known country, still he was utterly unable to explain how six absolute strangers could get into this country unseen. Who they were, where they had come from, how they had got in here unknown to everybody—the whole thing was uncanny. He hardly knew what to expect of them next.

Splashing back upon the launch, he told his men tersely: "They're not in sight yet, and I could see for twenty miles. We've got to meet up with them before they reach the Forks. They're making tracks. Ped, you've light to drive by now. We'll take our chances."

Twice more that morning, between Pedneault's reckless dashes, he hurried ashore and futilely searched ahead. Something had gone wrong. The patrol should be within sight of them. Estimating their speed and the speed of the pursuing launch, he knew the police craft should have overhauled them about eighty miles above the MacMillan trading post. He had come a hundred and twenty, and no sight of them yet. They had either dodged aside, or had done something to give them a big edge over what he thought possible.

It was afterward, when the waters of the Alooska had given up their ghastly secret, that Joyce MacMillan listened to the accounts of several Yellowknife men and gazed upon certain grim evidence, and pieced together the story of how those bandits were able to keep in the lead. But Alan knew nothing of that harrowing story now; he knew only that something had upset all his calculations.

Fifteen miles from the Alooska Forks he went ashore a last time and climbed a squat tree. He had a clear view to the Forks. The glasses picked up a sight that set his heart pounding madly against his ribs.

Far ahead, three short miles from the Forks of the Alooska, a pair of tiny black objects, like bugs crawling along a silver ribbon.

He jumped out of the tree, leaped down the slope.

Splashing aboard, he flung all caution to the winds. "Throw into it, Pedneault! We've got to beat them to the Forks. We'll close in on them in the launch. Got to! They'll hear us but they won't stop, won't fight, if they can make it there. Open her up! To h—l with rocks and mud bars now!"

His last words were drowned in the engine roar as Pedneault opened out the launch. With the wind stinging his eyes and the spray lashing him, Alan clutched the painter to keep from being flung bodily overboard, and gave Pedneault what help he could.

The craft careened around the last bend, a scant mile from the great Y of the Alooska. A clear open stretch lay in front. Dashing the blinding spray from his eyes, Alan rose precariously to his feet, looked ahead; and his heart sank as the truth was borne in upon him.

Those canoes had beaten him to the Forks.

It was maddening, his defeat—doubly maddening for its closeness to a smashing triumph. He had come within five minutes of overhauling them in the launch, and then had missed, had missed by a mile that loomed gigantic as two hundred. They had beaten him. They had heard the thundering boat, had flung their whole strength into the race; and now were whipping on eastward along one or other of the Alooska branches.

The launch would have to be abandoned at the Forks. He knew the police boat would be stranded or wrecked within half a mile if it attempted to go up either of those shallow streams. He would have to take to paddle canoes and split his party.

Unbated, he planned swiftly. The chances were ten to one that the bandits had darted up the left branch leading northeast into the Thal-Azzah. He decided quickly: "I'll follow that left branch. I'll take one canoe and two men. I'll take Bill with me; he's a red-haired devil in a fight, he's our best shot, he'll be dependable in whatever comes. But the third man—Ped or Larry?" Both splendid men, both experienced veterans of many a patrol.

He made up his mind: "I'll send Ped up the right branch with Burgeon and Whipple. Bill and Larry and I'll shoot up the left. We'll be the ones to do the business."

As the great Y of the Alooska loomed up, he turned and gestured to Hardsock and Larry. Silently understanding, they crept back to the stern deck, unlashed the canoes and had them ready by the time that Pedneault, slowing down the launch, steered it in between two little willow islands at the Forks and stopped.

Alan ordered him: "Ped, take these two men and whip up the south branch.

West African Colony of Liberia Flourishing

The free negro republic of Liberia was established in West Africa long before slavery was abolished in this country. The American Colonization society was formed in December, 1816, for the purpose of colonizing part of Africa with freed negroes. The first company of colonists, consisting of 88 persons, sailed in 1820, but on arriving in Sierra Leone many of them succumbed to malaria. Colonization under the auspices of the American Colonization society continued until 1847, when the society withdrew its active assistance and urged the settlers to set up an independent form of government. A constitution patterned after that of the United States was adopted in July, 1847. At that time the number of immigrants from America and their descendants was about 3,000. At the present time there are about 20,000 American-Liberians, Larry and Bill and I'll cover the north. If you sight them, don't pitch into that pack. You'd be fighting six men single-handed. If they did happen to go that way, you drop back here to the Forks and wait for us. We'll be able to track them in that timber country. Let's pile out. They can't be over a mile and a half away."

Bill snarled: "H—l's blue blazes, Alan!—let's stick together. Us splitting this up like this, it's the d—dest fool trick I ever heard of!"

"Shut up!" Alan snapped. "General's orders, not mine. Every d—d thing you say or do will be tattled to him." He tossed the launch anchor into the mud. "I said pile out. Let's be moving." He stepped down into a canoe, stood rifle between his knees, caught up a paddle.

Cursing beneath their breath, Bill and Larry clambered in with him.

The two canoes separated.

Alan's estimate that his quarry could not be more than a mile and a half in the lead, was true enough; but a stern chase is a long chase, and if those bandits were aching from exhaustion, they had the fear of death in their hearts to goad them on.

A whole hour, an hour of terrible labor, went by, and still no sight or sound of the bandits. With the responsibility of this patrol on him, with human lives, the lives of comrades, at stake, a fear gripped Alan that those bandits had taken the south branch of the Alooska. If they had, Frank Pedneault and those two raw recruits might run into an ambush; or Ped might attack them, reckless fellow that he was, practically lone-handed, and get killed.

The chase was entering the Thal-Azzah itself, that watery wilderness of lakes and labyrinthine channels and muskug thousands of square miles in extent. Not far ahead the branch split into a dozen channels leading in every direction. Pursuit would end there. A few miles more, and those canoes would be swallowed up in the watery oblivion of the Thal-Azzah.

But then, as he skirted around a headland, his prophecy yesterday to Haskell, and his conviction, founded on long man-hunting experience, that those bandits would surely follow this left branch, were suddenly proved true to the letter. On ahead, a scant thousand yards, he caught one fleeing glimpse of two heavily laden canoes that carried six men.

Dipping faster, deeper, he and Bill and Larry paddled at a furious pace to come up within rifle range. The river was so winding that they could see only a few hundred yards in front. There was danger, a terrible danger, of running headlong into a blind ambush where all three of them would be killed outright and their canoes sunk before they even could start to shoot back. Every stroke, every curve, every clump of flags they skimmed close past, was a deadly peril. They knew it, but they dared not slow up. They were taking their chances.

As they skirted out upon a shallow little lake fringed about with tall flags, Larry suddenly heaved back on his paddle.

"Lift out! Look! Alan, look over there!"

Alan looked where he pointed, at the north shore, at the wall of dense reeds. A path had been broken through the flags there; the reeds were parted, some of them trampled, their tops bent to either side.

It told the story to him. Hard-pressed, those men had whipped ashore to shake off pursuit; had lifted canoes to shoulder, and were trying to cut north and hit another channel. Oblivious to ambush danger, they skimmed over to the telltale break in the flags and drove out upon the mud. Alan and Bill slung the canoe upon their shoulders; and with Larry in the lead, following the signs, they started at a lope back through the flags.

Within a few hundred yards they came to a little creek, a sluggish muskrat highway that led north. The bandits had taken to it. Too shallow for a canoe, they had had to wade. So recently had they passed, the water was still rolled from their boots.

The little creek took Alan's party a thousand yards north to a lake, a deep blue lake covering several acres; and there, within the Thal-Azzah itself, late in the afternoon, the long relentless chase came to its end.

Larry, a dozen steps in the lead, glimpsed the silvery sheen of water ahead; and stopping dead-short, motioned Bill and Larry to be cautious. They belled forward toward the lake edge where the flags were thin and they had clear view.

STAGE COACH TALES

By E. C. TAYLOR

The Runaway Stage

JUST as modern railroads sometimes are wrecked, shaking up or even killing passengers, so the stage coaches that were the chief mode of transportation between the Atlantic coast and the Middle West along the old National road a century ago, had their mishaps, sometimes fatal.

Runaways were infrequent, but several are recorded. In three or four there was loss of life, but more often the passengers suffered only minor injuries when the stages overturned.

David Gordon, who was driving for James Reeside's "June Bug" line—so named by Reeside's rival, Lucius W. Stockton, who said the line would last only until the June bugs came—was driving west from Claysville, Pa., soon after he had started handling the reins, when his horses ran off.

The coach carried a full load of passengers, and young Gordon, seeing that the flying horses could not be checked by ordinary methods, pulled the coach off the road and turned it over against a high bank.

The passengers were badly frightened, but none was hurt. They attributed their escape from death or injury to the skillfulness of the driver. After righting the coach, which was little damaged, Gordon proceeded to Roney's Point.

This incident, or accident, gave Gordon a wide reputation as a cool and skillful driver and he rapidly advanced to the front rank of his calling. When the "June Bug" line was withdrawn from the road, as Stockton had predicted, Gordon took service with the "Good Intent" line and continued with it until all through lines of stage coaches were taken from the road.

Gordon was a very strong man. He was 6 feet tall and weighed 200 pounds, and there was not an ounce of fat on his body. It was said that he could fight, but was not quarrelsome.

On one occasion he was compelled to engage in a knockdown, in self defense. That was at Philadelphia, Va. Three toughs fell upon him at that place, declaring their intention of "doing him up," as the phrase then was.

They failed ignominiously. Gordon routed all three completely and decisively, and they never again sought an encounter with him. And the example of their fate rendered others with pugnacious proclivities to be shy about encountering him.

David Gordon was one of a class of quiet, well-mannered, soft-spoken stage drivers who did much to keep the reputation of all coach drivers of his time on a high plane before the public.

According to A. J. Endsley, who was born and reared along the old National road, the old time stage coach drivers, as a class, were better morally than the old wagoners who drove the huge freight wagons along the highway.

When the great road was opened, these wagoners immediately took possession, usurping all rights, and kept to the middle of the highway with their long trains of brightly painted covered gondolas filled with the farm products of the West, or the manufactured goods and staples of the East, forcing other vehicles to turn around them.

The stage drivers resented this autocracy, and decided to put a stop to it. They armed themselves with long poles, at the ends of which they placed spikes. On a given day, they started out, and as they met the wagon trains, refused to turn out, driving into the wagon trains with their make-shift lances and completely routing them. The hardy wagoners knew when they were beaten, and the fast stages thereafter were given the right of way.

Endsley says that some of the old stage drivers were given to blasphemy and heavy drinking, but that the worst of the stage drivers could be beaten in those respects by most of the wagoners.

He named, besides Gordon and "Red" Bunting, as well behaved stage drivers Thomas Grau, Alex Thompson, John Mills, Charley Howell, John High, William Robinson, Isaac Frazee, Isaac Denny, James A. Carroll, Samuel Halsted, William White, Samuel Jacob, Thomas Moore, William Bishop and John Bunting.

Two of the old stage drivers, William Robinson and Pate Side, were among the most noted penmen in the country.

"Bond" and "Stock" Holders

The primary distinction between a bondholder and a stockholder is that the former is a creditor and the latter a part owner. This is a general distinction only, and does not take into account the various finer legal distinctions. The bondholder lends his money to the company, and is promised interest at a stated amount, as well as repayment of the principal sum at a future date. The stockholder, on the other hand, has a certain undivided share in the property of the company, the right to participate in profits, and generally voting privileges.

Lesson for December 13

JOHN'S VISION ON PATMOS

GOLDEN TEXT—And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; I am the first and the last; I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.

LESSON TEXT—Revelation 1:1-20.
PRIMARY TOPIC—The Heavenly Home.

JUNIOR TOPIC—John's Vision of Heaven.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—John Sees the Ever-living Christ.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Glorified Saviour.

We should be glad that the lesson committee has given us another lesson from the Book of Revelation, which contains Christ's last message to man.

I. The Preface (1:1-3).

1. The title of the book (v. 1). The Revelation (unveiling) of Jesus Christ. The revelation of Jesus Christ refers to his personal appearing in glory to judge the world and to establish his kingdom. The word "apocalypse," translated "revelation," signifies according to New Testament usage the unveiling of a person (II Thess. 1:6-10; I Pet. 1:7). The theme of the book is Christ's second coming, his personal, visible appearance in glory (vv. 1, 7, 10).

2. To whom made known (vv. 1, 2). To his servant John—"To show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass."

3. A benediction to those who read, hear, and keep the sayings of the book (v. 3). It must be possible to understand these sayings, or the promise is meaningless.

II. The Salutation (vv. 4-8).

1. To whom (v. 4). The seven churches then existing in Asia Minor. Seven, the number of completeness, suggests a symbolism of the Church throughout her course.

2. From whom (v. 4).
a. From him which was, and is, and is to come.

b. From the seven spirits which are before the throne—the Holy Spirit in his seven-fold plenitude as set forth in Isaiah 11:2, also in the Gospel of John.

c. From Jesus Christ (vv. 5-7). While presenting Christ as the gracious Redeemer, John's prophetic eye caught the vision of the Coming One in glory, exclaiming, "Behold he cometh" (v. 7), the Alpha and Omega (v. 8).

III. The Vision of Glory (vv. 9-18).

1. The seven golden lamp stands (v. 12). These candlesticks are the churches (v. 20), thus presented because they are the light holders in this world's darkness.

2. The Son of man in the midst of the candlesticks (vv. 13-18). Christ in the midst of the churches indicates that they give forth light only when Christ is the central figure.

a. "Clothed with a garment down to the foot" (v. 13). This is a royal as well as a priestly robe (Isa. 22:21), and signifies his right to judge and to rule, as well as to offer sacrifice.

b. His head and hair white as wool (v. 14, cf. Dan. 7:19, 20). This has a twofold significance—purity and eternity.

c. Eyes as a flame of fire (v. 14). This suggests his infallible knowledge.

d. Feet like burnished brass (v. 15). This indicates that he comes as Judge and King, with irresistible power.

e. His voice as the sound of many waters (v. 15). His voice of judgment will be outside of man's control. All excuses will be swept aside by his irresistible word.

f. Seven stars in his right hand (v. 16). According to verse twenty, stars mean the messengers of the churches, perhaps pastors or representatives sent forth to comfort John in his lonely exile. The minister lies in the right hand of Jesus Christ, hears his message, and speaks it out.

g. Out of his mouth was a sharp two-edged sword (v. 16). Observe that this is a mouth sword. "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him" (John 12:48). "The word of God is sharper than any two-edged sword" (Heb. 4:12). The two edges indicate its double action, condemning the evil and approving the good and excellent.

h. His countenance was as the sun shining in his strength (v. 16). The effect of sunshine is healthful and joyous to some things, while it is death dealing to others. The manifestation of the glorified king will be hailed with delight by those who love him, and will create dismay in those who do not love him.

GLEANINGS

The devil always pays big wages.

The Lord's payroll is never padded.

A hard heart never makes a warm hand.

A dollar an hour will keep a man from getting sour.

The world is like a floating island and as sure as we anchor to it, we shall be carried away by it.

Mercolized Wax Keeps Skin Young

Get an ounce and use as directed. Fine particles of aged skin peel off until all defects such as pimples, liver spots, tan and freckles disappear. Skin is then soft and velvety. Your face looks years younger. Mercolized Wax brings out the hidden beauty of your skin. To remove wrinkles use one ounce Powdered Rosaline dissolved in one-half pint witch hazel. At drug stores.

"Tracer" for Debtors

The debtor who has vanished to parts unknown, leaving unpaid bills, may now be traced through the Post Office department for a fee of 25 cents, by a recent act of congress. The creditor sends a registered letter to the last known address of the debtor, marking the letter "return receipt requested showing address where delivered." If the postal department is able to deliver the letter, and usually it is, a receipt will be returned to the sender showing the new address. Heretofore it has been impossible to obtain such forwarding addresses from the post office.

Pain Quickly Relieved

Most cases of rheumatism and many diagnosed as neuritis are caused by germ action. Consistent use of B. & M. The Penetrating Germicide, will quickly relieve the acute pain and in most cases the B. & M. Treatment will stop the growth of the germs.

Your druggist should be able to supply B. & M. in $1.25 and 75 cent sizes. If not, send his name and we will ship direct. F. E. ROLLINS COMPANY, 53 Beverly St., Boston, Mass.—Adv.

Biddy's "Contribution"

Rev. Frank W. Stephens looked askance at the titter from his congregation. Then he saw a hen marching up the aisle of his church in Mt. Sterling, Ohio. Past the pulpit, into the choir loft marched the hen. The congregation sat spell-bound as the hen laid an egg. Ushers collected the "contribution" and ejected the hen.—Indianapolis News.

Biddy Outwits Weasel

How a laying hen outwitted a weasel is reported from Carnwath, England. The biddy had been in the habit of laying an egg daily on the doorstep of a farmhouse, and just as regularly a weasel sucked the offering dry. Apparently the hen discovered the theft, for it now takes the precaution of laying its daily contribution on the farmer's easy chair in the kitchen. And the weasel is too timid to enter the house.

Seals Bark, Rout Burglars

When two men broke into a fish market at Montrose, Scotland, late at night they awakened two captive seals, kept in a tank adjacent to the office. Barking in no uncertain tones, the seals caused the burglars to flee empty-handed before they could gain entrance to the office.

Total number in grades 1-8			120
Total number in High School			38
Grand Total			158

The pupils of Miss Doig's room have taken down their Indian sand table in preparation for assembling their Christmas table. The Indian and Thanksgiving table was most interesting and served as a basis for many interesting talks and lessons on the early history of this great holiday.

All the grades are busily at work on their Christmas program to be presented on the evening of December 22. The title is, "Christmas of Olden Days". This program is in charge of Miss Doig and Mrs. Ferguson and promises to be an outstanding event of the Christmas season.

Children in the intermediate room are busy making and arranging decorations for their room in keeping with the Christmas season.

A beautiful patriotic picture, painted by Mr. Thomas Moore, was presented to the seventh and eighth grade room by Mr. Moore. This is much appreciated.

The students of the High School who are on the honor roll are, Vivian Walston, Erwin McGovney, and Glenn Knakmuhs. Two of the students, Vivian Walston and Erwin McGovney have been on the honor roll before.

The Fairmont teams mastered both the Mokena grade and high school teams at the Mokena gymnasium last Friday night. The score of the first game was 16-5. The second game was much closer and very exciting. The two teams were very evenly matched as the score of 20-18 would indicate. With 40 seconds to play and the game tied 18-18, a Fairmont player made a basket. Mokena was unable to score during the remaining seconds and the game ended 20-18 in favor of Fairmont.

An outstanding feature of the game was the exceptionally close guarding on the part of both teams. Neither team was able to make any short easy shots.

LUTHERAN MISSION

New Lenox, Illinois.
Rev. Paul E. Schauer.
Divine worship in the Grace Episcopal church will be conducted on Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in the English language by the Rev. Paul E. Schauer of Mokena. The Sunday school will meet at 1 o'clock. If you are looking for a church home you are welcome. Come thou with us and we will do thee good. Saturday afternoon the Sunday school will meet at 1:00 o'clock to rehearse the Christmas program. All children are welcome.

Prayer. Lutherans teach that prayer is a Christian's communion with God; that, though it is not an act by which merit or reward is won it is divinely commanded, should be regularly practiced by every Christian for his own sake and for the benefit of others, and, if made in faith, had God's definite and sure promises of gracious acceptance and ready answer. The Investiture Service held Saturday, Dec. 5th was very successful and was well attended. Joliet was represented by a troop of Scouts as also was New Lenox. The Scouts that were registered as Tenderfoot, were ushered in by two Scouts of the New Lenox troop.

Those registered as Tenderfoot Scouts of Troop 40 are as follows:

Richard Sippel, Wesley Cappel, Harold Cappel, Erwin McGovney, and Richard Erickson. The Scouts that were registered as Tenderfoot Scouts are Harold Balaz and Elsworth McGovney.

Old toys may be taken to Semmlers print shop or to Wannemackers store; they will then be collected and remade.

On Saturday, Dec. 12 the Scouts will meet at the school house and will go to Mr. Lynk's work shop.

Rock Island to

Exhibit Historical Rail

Sections of old iron rail recently brought to light in Arkansas and which originally were laid on the old Memphis and Little Rock Railroad, now a part of the Rock Island Lines, are soon to be placed as permanent exhibits in the Museum of Science and Industry of Chicago and the Transportation Library of the University of Michigan.

According to investigation made by the Rock Island, this rail was made in France, and shipped by water to Memphis at the close of the Civil War. The rail contains the inscription "VEZIN. Av.", was cast entirely of iron and is still in an excellent state of preservation. The rail was brought up the Mississippi River from New Orleans by boat and was laid originally in the neighborhood of DuVall's Bluff, Arkansas.

The Little Rock and Memphis Railroad was one of the first steam railways constructed west of the Mississippi River and was first put into operation west of Memphis in 1857 and was used during the Civil War for the transportation of troops. After the close of the Civil War the line was rebuilt and the imported rail laid.

Rock Island representatives believe this is one of the oldest examples of early iron rail to be found in this section.

The Will County Council of Religious Education Notes

The officers of the Will County Council of Religious Education met Sunday afternoon, December 6th at the First Presbyterian Church in Joliet. The president, Thomas Patterson of Plainfield, presided. Rev. P. G. Zandt of the First Baptist church of Joliet opened the meeting with prayer.

The secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Arthur Stark of Plainfield called the roll and read the minutes of the meeting held October 25th. The treasurer's report was read and accepted.

Rev. Van Zandt, Leadership Training Supt. for the County gave a report on activities along that line.

The president reported on the questionnaires sent out since the last meeting. These were sent to every church in the county and when answered and returned will determine what departments in the Sunday Schools need the help this organization can give.

There was a discussion on a Young People's conference for the county and the tentative date set for Monday, February 22nd. A committee was appointed to work with Rev. L. V. Sittler, County Young People's Supt. They are Miss Dorothy Welsh, Miss Maud Martin, Victor Rompel, all of Joliet and Edward Sproat, Joliet, R. D.

This conference will be held at the First Baptist church, Joliet.

It was suggested that a young people's workers conference be held in connection with this event. Efforts will be made to get state workers for the speakers for this conference.

Plans for raising the budget were discussed and for organizing Dist. six comprised of the townships of Wilmington, Reed, Custer and Wesley.

The meeting was closed with prayer by Mrs. Arthur Stark.

"We can't get through the Storm, Mother"

It is our aim to send your voice quickly and clearly to any place at any time and at the lowest possible cost.

The young folks planned to come home for the week-end. Saturday morning the blizzard struck the countryside and Mother was afraid they had been caught in the storm. Then Jean and Ted telephoned.

Although they couldn't come, they had a pleasant, heart-to-heart "voice-visit".

A telephone call to the folks back home is always enjoyable. When weather conditions keep you at home, you can still "visit" with Mother and Dad—even though they are fifty or thousands of miles away. Make a habit of telephoning home—it's great fun and inexpensive, too!

WHAT WE
NOW AREBy THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Emeritus Dean of Men,
University of Illinois.

Grover is quite discontented with the curriculum which the college has laid out for him. He has in mind certain things which he will be doing ten or twenty years from now, and so far as he can see a great deal of the work which he is required to do in college will be of no practical benefit to him at that time. He sees no use in Latin or English literature or military drill and a half dozen other things with which his course is cluttered up.

"We none of us set out with the intention of being what we now are," a shrewd observer of human nature has said, "and we have all of us had to adapt ourselves to our situation from time to time."

Possibly his statement is a little sweeping, but in my own case it is strangely true. I have never done anything that I planned to do, and no position which I have ever held did I go after. It was chance or opportunity or the request or the insistence of my friends that put me into one position or another. I think it is so with many people. They plan to do one sort of work or another and then settle down for life in something entirely different. For these reasons I believe it makes little difference what one studies in college, just so he chooses those branches of study which give him mental discipline and breadth of view. Whatever makes a man think is the best thing for him.

There was Brown. He had made up his mind before he was out of the grades that engineering was the thing for him. He ate up mathematics and physics and chemistry. He was miserable until his mother bought him a set of tools, and then he fixed everything in the neighborhood which needed mending or readjusting. He was on the honor roll in college in engineering, and was elected to Tau Beta Pi in his junior year. He is very likely a successful engineer now, you say. Not so. He is the president of a bank.

Grandmother at 32

Although she is barely thirty-two years old, Mrs. Pearl Downward of Rushville, Ind., holds the distinction of being the youngest grandmother in her state. At any rate, she is the youngest to claim the honor. Mrs. Downward was married at fifteen and became a mother a year later. Her daughter, Mrs. Verdi Stevens, now of Dallas, Texas, recently duplicated her mother's record.

TURK DICTATOR SPARES HERO'S LIFE

London.—"No traitor shall escape death," said Mustapha Kemal Pasha, dictator of Turkey, when, in 1923, he signed the death warrants previously executed by the sultan of Turkey, of those who had been traitors to their country during the war. The story has just reached London, however, of how the ghazi relented for the first time recently and freed one of Turkey's traitors.

The memory of his widowed mother, whom he adored, moved him to mercy in one of the most extraordinary stories coming out of the war. He granted state clemency to Capt. Sabry Bey, formerly of the British army, who had risked death by returning to Turkey eight years ago to see his mother before she died. He was arrested only recently.

Lieut. Sabry Bey of the Ottoman fusiliers of the imperial guard, was recommended for aeronautics in 1913 after a distinguished active service record in the Balkan war, and sent to England to train.

He was attached to the Royal Flying corps, then in its infancy, and became very popular in the mess. Through his kinsman, Prince Tewfik, the Turkish ambassador, who had fought with British allies in Crimea, he obtained entree into the most exclusive circles of English society.

When Britain declared war against Germany in August, 1914, Sabry, like all the rest of his comrades in the mess, got war fever. The pro-British tradition inherited from the Crimea became too strong for him. He entered the ranks of a British infantry regiment and fought at Mons, in the retreat, at Givenchy and at Neuve Chapelle. Within three months and before Turkey entered the war, Sabry Bey had won its commission as an officer in the British army in active service.

In the early days of November, 1914, telegrams from the war office at Constantinople arrived in London for Sabry recalling him to Turkey, which had already made up her mind to join the Germans. Sabry never replied and the Turkish ambassador was unable to obtain any trace of him.

In 1916 he received the Mons Star, the Military medal, and was mentioned in dispatches by the British commander in chief. In the meantime the Turks held an imperial court martial and the sultan signed his death warrant at the end of 1916. In 1923 Mustapha renewed it.

Eight years ago the friendly commander of a British torpedo boat destroyer shipped Sabry at a Bulgarian port and dropped him at the European side of the straits. The Turk swam back to his own country, despite the death warrant, because he had re-

Japan's new swimming star is Koji Yamazaki, sixteen-year-old high school boy, who broke the Japanese record for the 100-meter swim by splashing through the distance in 59.15 seconds, during the national championship meet at Tokyo. He is assured of a place on Japan's swimming squad in the 1932 Olympic games at Los Angeles.

PART PRETTY BRIDE AND BOY

Romance of Ozark Mountains
Ended by Court.

Independence, Mo.—The romance of a pretty little seventeen-year-old wife and a twenty-one-year-old husband ended in the Circuit court here when Judge C. Jasper Bell annulled their marriage in Bentonville, Ark.

Miss Eloise Shearer, sorority girl and leader on the University of Missouri campus last year, was the young wife and Charles Sears, son of a wealthy Kansas City family, was the husband. Both live in Kansas City.

Charles did not appear in court to defend himself in the annulment proceedings, but he was represented by his attorney, who did not contest any of the remarks that Eloise made concerning their marriage and love affair. Eloise said that they had been married while they were spending a week-end in the Missouri Ozarks.

Judge Bell inquired whether they were alone on the trip.

"No, no!" she replied. "There was another couple—a married couple—with us. We all had a few cocktails and Charles suggested that we go to Bentonville, a sort of Gretna Green, and get married. When we got there I gave my age as over twenty-one years. We were married."

They went on a four-day honeymoon trip to Chicago, Miss Shearer said.

Judge Bell restored her maiden name as she had asked in her petition.

Mrs. Florence Shearer, the girl's mother, was named as next friend for the girl, for purposes of the suit. She accompanied her daughter in the courtroom.

A piece of orange skin placed on top of the stove will take away the heavy odor of cooking from the kitchen and give out a pleasant fragrance.

To remove brown stains from light colored ranges, dip a cloth in turpentine and apply to stains. With a little pressure the stains will come off.

Label your jars and bottles with adhesive tape and write on the tape with red ink what the jars contain. The tape sticks to the jars and is not likely to loosen.

The hole in the bottom of a flower pot should never be closed up. Place a few cinders or bits of broken china over it to let the air in to the roots and keep the soil from coming through.

After washing and drying woolen blankets hang them on a line in the open air and beat them well with a carpet beater. This raises the fluff and the blankets look almost as good as new.

POTPOURRI

Plaster of Paris

Plaster of paris is made by baking gypsum, thus driving off the water and leaving a fine dry powder. One part of this powder added to two parts of water creates a thin paste, which hardens quickly on exposure to the air. By adding a small quantity of lime to the paste a very hard marble-like substance called calcine plaster is produced.

Lost Their Catch

Two dozen perch had the laugh on a pair of anglers at Seneca lake, New York. As the fishermen caught the fish they put them in a burlap bag hung over the side of the boat. Their only mistake was in failing to notice a large hole in the bottom of the bag, through which their catch disappeared as fast as caught.

DRAW them out with a "counter-irritant." Muscular lumbago, soreness and stiffness—generally respond to good old Mustarole. Doctors call it a "counter-irritant" because its warming action penetrates and stimulates blood circulation and helps to draw out infection and pain. It gets action and is not just a salve. But do not stop with one application. Apply this soothing, cooling, healing ointment generously to the affected area once every hour for five hours. Used by millions for over 20 years. Recommended by many doctors and nurses. All druggists.

Rises in the prices of eggs and creamery butter have been reported at Springfield.

Southern Illinois is portrayed by many far-sighted men as the coming center of industry and population and vastly able to support the thousands of workers who will find employment in factories and plants. The march of industry toward the West has begun to reach southern Illinois.

During the period from September 15 to October 15, Bloomington registered increases in both employment and pay rolls. Employment in twelve Bloomington factories has been rising steadily since May.

Paper and printing groups, packing plants, and manufacturers of furniture and cabinet work are all showing gains in employment throughout the Midwest. The International Harvester company has changed from a three-day week to a four-day week.

Factories of Deere and company in Moline and East Moline have been reopened on a part-time basis and a number of men are being employed. There is a possibility that future business will warrant adding more men later.

LION AND PYTHON CLASH OVER PREY

Big Snake Refuses a Fight to the Finish.

Big game hunting in the African wilds is no sport for weaklings. I have often, says a correspondent to the Cape Argus, sat through the cold night hours within ten feet of the bait without result. So when on two occasions snakes took an unheeded part in the proceedings, I was not altogether ungrateful to the "supers." The first time I played "lead" was in Portuguese East Africa some years ago.

To my hunting camp one afternoon came a native in haste, saying that a lion had just killed a young heifer about a mile away. The natives had driven the beast off before he had eaten his fill, and it was practically certain that he would return that night. I decided to "hide-up" for him.

He had killed near the edge of an open veld, dotted with scattered bushes; and it seemed that an extra "bush" might escape his attention. Desiring to be as close as possible to avoid missing my aim—since I depended on the moonlight and a piece of white paper on my foresight—I had a pit dug about 10 feet from the carcass. This was 3 feet deep, and over it we erected a rough pole roof and covered it with bushes, so that it looked like an evergreen bush about 3 feet high.

A small aperture was left facing the kill and about sundown I entered. The natives closed me in and went away, leaving me to await the dawn.

It must have been near ten o'clock, and I was divided between desire for a sleep and a smoke, when I heard a soft rustle near the kill. I jerked to attention and looked out. But instead of the soft-stepping, tawny form I expected, I saw a long, sinuous gray shape, gliding in undulating waves towards the bait. A huge python had chanced on the scene, and apparently decided that the meat looked good.

The snake approached swiftly, and then coiled beside the carcass, raising his head several feet in the air and glancing from side to side, as though seeking to assure himself of the absence of enemies. Then the head sank back, and shot rearwards towards a small bush about 6 feet from the kill. Coil after coil left the pile and followed, and when the head rounded the bush and glided again towards the kill, the great length became evident.

This time the head glided straight beneath the carcass, came up on the other side, back and under again, and the kill was encircled by the first coil, showing like a gray cable in the moonlight. Back and under went the head, and as the tail stretched taut to the bush he had circumnavigated, and the second coil encircled it, the carcass rolled over slowly towards the bush. Then came a soft, snapping sound, as the bones gave way under the tremendous pressure of the great coil.

At the instant I heard a harsh snarl, and the owner of the meat by right of might emerged from the bush at a swift trot. The snake became aware of the arrival of a second earlier than I did. As the lion reached the carcass the python was already half coiled, and the flat head shot like a streak straight towards him. With a growl he sprang aside and struck viciously at the gray cable; but as he turned, the snake coiled like lightning, and launched himself again.

After about five minutes the python suddenly shot out of coil away from the lion, and glided like a gray streak towards the bush. For an instant the lion watched his enemy's retreat; then with a low, fierce rumble of rage, turned to the meat.

As he reached it I drew a bead behind the shoulder and fired, and with a harsh grunt he collapsed on the kill. A few struggles to rise, two or three groaning snarls, and he lay still. I gave him another shot as he lay—to make sure he was not sham-

'Roads of Romance'

The time and station on which the weekly dramatic series, "Roads of Romance", is broadcast by the Chicago Motor Club players has been changed from 9 o'clock over WENR to 8 o'clock over WLS, on Wednesday nights. The drama next Wednesday will deal with romance in the Kentucky hill region.

In Memoriam

In loving remembrance of our dear son and brother, Norman Hartman who departed this life on December 10, 1930.

A precious one from us has gone
A voice we love is stilled;
A place is vacant in our home,
Which never can be filled.
God in His wisdom has recalled,
The boon his love had given,
And though the body slumbers here,
The soul is safe in Heaven.

The services at the German M. E. church on Sunday December 13th, will drop out in order to enable the members and friends to hear Bishop John L. Nuelsen at the Vermont
St. Methodist church in Blue Island.
Rev. Dr. Nuelsen is Bishop of the Zurich, Switzerland area of the Methodist Episcopal church, which includes most of Central Europe. The University of Berlin recently conferred the honorary Doctor of Divinity degree upon him, in recognition of the religious and charitable work done by the Methodist church among the children and the poor in Europe. This is an opportunity to hear one of the great religious leaders of our time.

Mrs. F. H. Arnold entertained the following guests Thanksgiving Day.

TINLEY PARK P. T. A. NOTES

The regular meeting of the P. T.
A. was held December 4th in Miss Stoll's room. Fifth and sixth grades entertained the members with lesson in history which was done very well.
After lessons the children were served ice cream bars and cookies and were very grateful. Next regular meeting will be held the second Friday in January, the 8th. Watch for latter notice.

Will Co. Historical Society Exhibits Quaint Old Prints

of lithographic art, whose processes had been a secret until brought to America by Currier and Ives.

An inspection of these ancient works, a characteristic development of early American history, was followed by an interesting program.

Albert J. Stevens presided at the meeting, the first part of which was given over to a series of brief tributes to the memory of Horace E.
Baldwin, long president of the Will County Historical society, whose recent death was felt a great loss to the society.

Among those who voiced these expressions of respect and esteem for their departed leader were Fred Weeks, Mrs. Mary A. Howe, J. B.
Gurney, John O'Connor, Mrs. Hattie Adams Keith and N. Lynk, of Manhattan, who read a set of resolutions to be put upon the records.

An interesting musical program was given by the youthful Stanley Stafford, who showed much promise in several piano selections, and was encored.

A dancing program was given by little Katherine Panetino and Master Joseph Blume.

Mrs. Adele Fay Williams gave a gallery talk upon the pictures. It transpired that the major part of the exhibit was the property of Mr. Stevens, who is an ardent collector, not only of ancient prints, but of historical things in general.

Among the numerous other loans of the old prints for the exhibit was a characteristic Currier and Ives head by Mrs. Howe, and a complete group of four American Homestead prints, by Wm. Semmler.

Numerous others brought in single prints to be reviewed. In general the entire exhibit aroused great interest

The next meeting will have as its general subject an exhibition of ancient firearms to engage masculine interest, and a collection of ancient dishes and pottery to intrigue the feminines.

At an early meeting Mrs. C. A.
Russell is to read a history of Fort Nonsense.

First Heavy Snow Transforms Country

The first heavy snow fall of this season fell during Tuesday night and created considerable extra work for the unemployed. Railroad men were called out during the night to keep the switches cleaned and the highway crews of the county and state highway departments were kept busy for a few hours cleaning the paved highways of snow.
